Ready or Not-Elections 2012 are Here

(From the NSEA-Retired Newsletter, Warren Wish, NSEA-Retired President)

Ready or not the elections of 2012 are right around the corner. Political ads are already blasting across television screens and more are on the way. Nevada is considered to be a swing state – each party will be searching for votes – you can expect lots of negative campaigning. Even though the economic crisis has worldwide proportions, it is particularly felt by Nevada's unemployed and families in foreclosure. Already, fingers have pointed at teachers, public employees and retirees for earning too much and receiving too many "entitlements".

In July, 2011 the NEA Representative Assembly met in Chicago, Ill; and teacher and ESP leaders from across the nation overwhelmingly approved an early endorsement of President Obama as the first step in the upcoming election battle.

Many delegates opposed elements of the President's educational policy: "Race to the Top", merit pay, and charter schools. Others wanted Secretary of Education Arnie Duncan replaced.

Ultimately, the decision was based on the fact that more than any other candidate, the President is the only one who believes every child should have a quality education in a great public school.

The 2012 national elections will be momentous for many other reasons. Across the country, Republican candidates are campaigning for Senate and Congressional offices on a platform of spending reduction without increasing revenue. What is not being widely talked about is the Republican Party's endorsement of federally funded school vouchers, opposition to collective bargaining for public employees, repeal of health care reform, changing defined benefit pensions into defined contribution plans, and emasculating major parts of Medicare and Social Security.

In Nevada, the political races are especially critical. The Senate race between Republican Dean Heller and Democrat Shelley Berkley will in large measure determine whether the U.S. Senate retains its Democrat majority and holds off passage of the Republican's economic agenda. So too, the Nevada Congressional races in District 2 between Kate Marshall (D) and Mark Amodei (R) and the open seat in Congressional District 1 will help determine whether the House of Representatives continues to have a very conservative Republican majority.

In the 2010 elections, across the country many teachers and retirees voted for what they thought were moderate Republican candidates. We all know how shocked Wisconsin teachers were by Republican Governor Scott Walker's frontal assault against unions, collective bargaining and cuts to public education. Less widely known is how New Jersey Governor Chris Christie (R) worked to severely underfund teacher pensions or how Texas Governor Rick Perry made massive cuts to public schools. Many of NSEA's own members voted for Governor Sandoval. His pleasant demeanor carefully shielded a stealthy approach to balancing the state budget by making huge cuts to public schools, the university system, and programs for seniors and the disadvantaged.

The 2012 election will be all about our country's vision for the future. Will the leaders of America work together to strengthen our economy to benefit all and not just the wealthiest? Will America strengthen its public schools or continue to move towards privatization? Will every child in America have the opportunity for a good education? Will America insure affordable health care and safeguard Social Security for seniors and people with disabilities? And will America remain a land with a large productive middle class – working, saving, and optimistic about the future for generations to come?

Contribute to the NEA Crisis Response Fund

(From the NSEA-Retired Newsletter, Warren Wish, NSEA-Retired President)

Attacks against public education, public employees and public programs have mushroomed to enormous proportions around the country. In almost fifty states, the NEA has been asked to help fight multi-pronged attacks funded by the billionaire Koch brothers, the Tea Party, and others with an extremist agenda. Responding to these media attacks takes money. Here in Nevada, the NEA recently made a sizeable grant and helped NSEA respond to Governor's proposed funding cuts and anti-teacher legislative agenda.

Beginning this year, all active NEA members will be assessed an additional $10 a year to establish a crisis response fund. Retirees can also contribute by sending a check for $10 or more to the NSEA on behalf of the NEA Crisis Response Fund. Though we are retired, we can still contribute to the fight to protect public education.

Update: Nevada Public Employees' Retirement System

(From the NSEA-Retired Newsletter, Warren Wish, NSEA-Retired President)

Fiscal year 2011 continued a path of very positive gains for Nevada PERS. For the third year in a row, investment gains substantially increased. The 20.8% increase for the fiscal year was an historic high. Today, PERS has over 25.2 billion dollars in assets.

For the past 28 years, PERS' investments have generated an annualized return of 9.6%. This far exceeds the annual 8% investment objective.

PERS continues to be on schedule to reduce its unfunded liability over the course of the next 25 years.

Nevada PERS remains a national leader in maximizing investment gain and limiting market risk. PERS has a conservative investment philosophy and believes that preserving capital in down markets is just as important as increasing assets in up markets.
